A Little Hopedale History...

Hopedale is located at the southeastern edge of Worcester County and occupies the valley of the upper Mill River. The Hopedale Community, initially known as "The Dale", was established in 1841 in a section of what was then part of the Town of Milford, as an Utopian experiment by Reverend Adin Ballou, a Universalist preacher who advocated temperance, abolitionism, women's rights, universal salvation, and Practical Christian Socialism.

The religious community lasted for fifteen years, ending in bankruptcy in 1856. Two Draper brothers, Ebenezer and George, who owned approximately three-fourths of the joint stock in the community, and had pooled their money to start a business manufacturing textile machinery, assumed all its debts. By the late 1880's the brothers' business, The Draper Corporation, was the largest employer in Milford with more than 3,000 employees. By 1892, with the advent of the Northrop Loom, Draper became the largest producer of textile machinery in the country. By World War I, the majority of the 400,000 looms in the United States had been made by Draper and the company was selling to China, Russia and Mexico.

The Draper family maintained complete control over the town for the following 113 years. They believed that good houses make good workers, and created a model self-contained company town with one of the best collections of architecturally significant double houses in the country, built on hills and in valleys in garden settings which preserved the views. They also built the public buildings which form the center of town and are still in use today.

In January, 1886, the Drapers petitioned the State Legislature to separate a section of Milford into another town. The request was granted, and on April 7, 1886, Hopedale -- named because the Drapers called this section of Milford the "Dale of Hope" -- became a town.

It can be said today that Hopedale, with its tree-shaded streets - lined with handsome homes, stone walls, manicured lawns and public buildings of architectural and historic significance, has largely maintained its character of a nineteenth century mill village. Life in this tiny Blackstone River Valley town (population 5,664), just 30 miles southwest of Boston, is often described as a safe, restful haven set apart from the hustle and bustle of the rest of the world.

Narrative based on information provided by the Massachusetts Historical Commission.
